1. Location of the Meeting

The 2011 Plenary Meeting of the FAI Aerobatics Commission (CIVA) will be held at the Polish Aviation Museum in Cracow.

The Polish Aviation Museum in Cracow - www.muzeumlotnictwa.pl

- (Muzeum Lotnictwa Polskiego) has managed to assemble one of the best collections of aircrafts, from the earliest aeroplanes of the 1910s to recently decommissioned jet fighters. Launched in 1964 on the site of former Rakowice-Czyzyny air-force base and airport, the museum has taken up most of their buildings and tarmac. In 2010 a very modern exhibition hall has been added to the complex.

The museum's collections are divided between four buildings and the former airfield tarmac where the large aircrafts are displayed. Moreover, some other comprehensive exhibits, presenting for instance missile systems, are also shown in the open air among the buildings.

The Museum's Main Building (Główny Gmach Muzeum) is a concrete structure whose floor area totals 3,378 square meters. It contains an exhibition hall, an education hall, a screening room, a library with a reading room, an internet cafe, and a cloakroom. The exhibition area of 1,022 sq. meters accommodates 21 aircrafts including France's Bleriot 11 of 1909 as well as some of the prominent machines in the history of Polish aviation. The 588-sq-meter education hall is equipped with a flight simulator available to the public, multimedia presentations, interactive toys, information booths, and rows of recliner seats imitating an airplane cabin.

The Great War Aircraft Exhibition, situated in an old warehouse, consists of the museum's most cherished possessions – the early planes of the first two decades of the 20th century. The best part of them has once constituted the core of Hermann Goering's collection.

The Main Exhibition Hangar holds a collection of aircrafts from old gliders through WW2 fighters to air ambulances.

The building behind the great hangar houses two exhibitions: one called 'Stories of History', the other showing 'aero engines'.

Next to the crumbling tarmac packed with airplanes and choppers, a pair of smaller hangars have been converted to venues for temporary exhibitions.
